The winter-flowering Camellias are truly the aristocrats of Southern gardens, and rightly so, since who could imagine a better combination than a lustrous evergreen shrub of outstanding year-round dignity and beauty, together with the endless glory of magnificent blossoms in countless forms and colors at a time of the year when our Northern friends would think flowers could only come from the greenhouse.

The ever-widening choice of Camellia varieties and species being made available makes it possible for the Camellia grower to have flowers on his breakfast table every morning from late August or September to early April. We have indicated the approximate blooming time for each variety. In general, early varieties are at the height of their bloom before Christmas, mid-season varieties from Christmas to early February, and late varieties in February and March in this area. Of course there is much overlapping, and we have marked some varieties with two symbols to indicate this. In some seasons blooms come sooner or later than their normal blooming periods.

Complete planting and cultural suggestions will be sent on request. There is included in them a discussion of the question "How far north will Camellias grow outdoors?" and a paragraph on When Should Azaleas and Camellias be Set Out?

The Camellia Sasanqua varieties have "(Sas)" after the name of the variety.
